PTE Reading Practice Test 5

Question 1 : Reading & Writing : Fill In The Blanks

Look at the text below with blanks. Choose the appropriate word from the provided lists for each blank.

Item 1:

An _____ type of diamond may have come to Earth from outer space, scientists say. Called carbonado or "black" diamonds, the _____ stones are found in Brazil and the Central African Republic. They are _____ for being the color of charcoal and full of frothy bubbles. The diamonds, which can _____ at more than 3,600 carats, can also have a face that looks like melted glass. Because of their _____ appearance, the diamonds are _____ as gemstones. But they do have industrial applications and were used in the drill bits that helped dig the Panama Canal. Now a team led by Stephen Haggerty of Florida International University in Miami has presented a new study _____ that the odd stones were brought to Earth by an asteroid billions of years ago. The findings were published online in the journal Astrophysical Journal Letters on December 20. The scientists exposed polished pieces of carbonado to extremely intense infrared light. The test revealed the presence of many hydrogen-carbon bonds, indicating that the diamonds probably formed in a hydrogen-rich environment—such as that found in space. The diamonds also showed strong _____ to tiny Nanodiamonds, which are frequently found in meteorites. "They're not identical," Haggerty said, "but they're very _____." Astrophysicists, he added, have developed theories predicting that Nano diamonds form easily in the titanic stellar explosions called supernovas, which scatter debris through interstellar space. The deposits in the Central African Republic and Brazil, he said, _____ come from the impact of a diamond-rich asteroid billions of years ago, when South America and Africa were joined.

Item 2:

There were twenty-six freshmen _____ in English at Beijing Language Institute in the class of 1983. I was assigned to Group Two with another eleven boys and girls who had _____ from big cities in China. I was _____ that language study required smallness so that we would each get more attention from the skillful teachers. The better the school, the smaller the class. I realized that my classmates were ready all _____ in English, simple sentences tossed out to each other in their red-faced introductions and carefree chatting. Their intonations were curving and dramatic and their pronunciation refined and accurate. But as I stretched to catch the drips and drops of their humming dialogue, I couldn't _____ it all, only that it was English. Those words now flying before me sounded a little familiar. I had read them and tried to speak them, but I had never heard them _____ back to me in such a speedy, fluent manner. My big plan of _____ the city folks was thawing before my eyes.

Item 3:

Drive down any highway, and you'll see a proliferation of chain restaurants—most likely, if you travel long and far enough you'll see McDonald's golden arches as well as signs for Burger King, Hardee's, and Wendy's the "big four" of burgers. Despite its name, Burger King has fallen short of _____ the burger crown, unable to surpass market leader McDonald's No. 1 sales status. Always the bridesmaid and never the bride, Burger King remains No. 2. Worse yet, Burger King has experienced a six-year 22 percent decline in customer traffic, with its overall quality rating dropping while ratings for the other three _____ have increased. The decline has been _____ to inconsistent product quality and poor customer service. Although the chain tends to throw advertising dollars at the problem, an understanding of Integrated Marketing Communication theory would suggest that internal management problems (nineteen CEOs in fifty years) need to be _____ before a unified, long-term strategy can be put in place. The _____ of _____ in brand image and messages, at all levels of communication, has become a basic tenet of IMC theory and practice. The person who takes the customer's order must communicate the same message as Burger King's famous tagline, "Have it your way," or the customer will just buzz up the highway to a chain restaurant that seems more consistent and, therefore, more _____.

1. Claiming, winning, getting, filing

Item 4:

The first section of the book covers new modes of assessment. In Chapter 1, Kimbell (Goldsmith College, London) responds to _____ of design programs as formalistic and conventional, stating that a focus on risk-taking rather than hard work in design innovation is equally problematic. His research contains three parts that include preliminary exploration of design innovation qualities, investigation of resulting classroom practices, and development of evidence-based assessment. The assessment he describes is presented in the form of a structured worksheet, which includes a collaborative _____ and digital photographs, in story format. Such a device encourages stimulating ideas, but does not recognize students as design _____. The assessment sheet includes holistic impressions as well as details about "having, growing, and proving" ideas. _____ judgments are evident in terms such as "wow" and "yawn" and reward the quality and quantity of ideas with the term, "sparkiness", which fittingly is a pun as the model project was to design light bulb packaging. In addition, the assessment focuses on the process of optimizing or complexity control as well as proving ideas with thoughtful criticism and not just generation of novel ideas. The definitions for qualities such as "technical" and "aesthetic" pertaining to users, are too narrow and ill defined. The author provides _____ of the project, its features and structures, students' notes and judgments, and their sketches and photographs of finished light bulb packages, in the Appendix.

1. Praise, results, criticisms, compliments
2. Line, element, factor, figure
3. Makers, leaders, students, innovators
4. Colloquial, formal, traditional, subjective
5. Results, examples, themes, ideas
